The following is a letter written by Vyomesh Joshi, HP's President, Imaging and Printing Systems, to the editor of the Investors Business Daily.

[LETTERHEAD OF HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY]

Dear Editor:

Your January 8th article, "HP's Print Potential At Issue", presents an inaccurate view of the impact of the Compaq merger to the HP imaging and printing (IPS) business. HP was not provided the opportunity to comment on the merger for this article, and your readers are entitled to the following facts:

- o Walter Hewlett's assertion that the merger will "hamstring" IPS is flawed. In fact, the merger will provide key benefits such as the ability to reinvest for growth, access to new enterprise accounts and the benefits of a direct selling model. The merger's ability to enable improved profitability in other businesses will create greater flexibility for expanded investment in core IPS R&D and new initiatives.
- o The premise that the merger will drain resources from the printing business or negatively impact digital printing's promise could not be further from the truth. HP today participates in printing and imaging, enterprise computing, devices, networking and services -- all of which are essential to delivering end-to-end digital imaging solutions for consumers and businesses. The merger with Compaq bolsters our capabilities in these areas and provides new capabilities in important areas like mobility, storage, fault-tolerant computing, user-interface design and new kinds of devices -- all of which will further enhance our position in digital imaging.
- o The article notes HP's move into the high-end commercial printing market, including our [announcement that HP has entered into a definitive agreement to acquire] Indigo N.V. but suggests that a merger with Compaq won't add to this because of Compaq's focus on PCs. Again, the article misses a key point, which HP outlines clearly in a Dec. 19, 2001 SEC filing, that Compaq brings more to the table than PC assets. The commercial printing market is currently undergoing a transformation that relies on powerful computer systems. Having Compaq's assets will help accelerate HP's ability to compete in this business and better serve our customers.

HP has long been a leader in imaging and printing, and the merger with Compaq will strengthen our ability to innovate and deliver solutions for these exciting new markets and new customers.

Sincerely,

Vyomesh Joshi
