Columbia Management Fund Shareholders

to Save Projected $30 Million Annually

Result of fee change and fund merger proposals; additional fund mergers announced

BOSTON — as of September 28, 2010 — Columbia Management announced that it expects fund shareholders to save approximately $30 million annually pending the implementation of fee change and fund merger proposals.

The projected $30 million in savings will result primarily from completed fund mergers and realization of economies of scale, including reducing or eliminating fixed expenses associated with merging funds, reaching initial or additional management fee breakpoints, and spreading fixed expenses over a wider asset base.

Additional proposals by Columbia Management were also approved by the funds' boards of directors/trustees, including changes to standardize management and other fees for the funds under a consistent pricing model. The fee change and fund merger proposals are expected to be fully implemented in the first half of 2011, subject to final funds board and shareholder approval. Details of the proposals will be included in proxy materials expected to be mailed to fund shareholders in early 2011.

We worked with our boards to ensure that the funds will benefit from being part of a broader product lineup with overall fee and expense reductions, including significant reductions for certain funds, said Kevin Connaughton, head of mutual funds. Our goal is to implement a pricing model that is consistent across the combined fund family, is in the best interest of the overall shareholder base, and will further enhance Columbia Management's competitive position within the industry.

Columbia Management also announced that it has proposed nine fund mergers as part of its ongoing integration efforts. These proposed mergers are in addition to the 62 proposed mergers that were announced in August. All mergers are subject to final board and shareholder approval.

This is another important step toward building a fully integrated lineup of strong-performing retail and institutional products that provide investment solutions for our clients, said Chris Thompson, head of product management and marketing. We believe shareholders will benefit from these pending actions and proposals.
