ITEM 5. Other Events

HickoryTech Corporation (Nasdaq:HTCO) announced today that it has effectively locked in on fixed interest rates on $100 million of the company's long-term debt. HickoryTech had already reduced outstanding debt levels from $171 million at the end of 2001 to $149 million at the end of the first quarter of 2003. Interest expense in 2003 will be 40 percent less than the $10.9 million expended in 2001. This is due to lower debt, lower interest rates, and the rate protection assured by the new locked-in interest rates. HickoryTech executed various after-market agreements with its commercial lenders and took advantage of current fixed interest rate options within its existing credit facility agreement.

We already benefited from some of the lowest lending rates of any of our peers, with an average interest rate of less than 4.3 percent at year end 2002, and it was advantageous to lock in a significant part of that benefit for long term, said David Christensen, vice president and chief financial officer. This new low fixed interest rate fits with our long-term strategic plan to use low-cost debt as a vital component of the Company's capital.

We have a strong balance sheet, and now we have added some meaningful interest rate protection for the shareholders as well, Christensen said.
