FACT SHEET

Benefits to the United States

No industry has experienced such rapid and continuous change in so short a time as the global telecommunications industry. The Internet and advanced broadband and wireless technologies have changed forever the communications industry. Today, people communicate more often, from more places, in more ways with different networks, devices and technologies than ever before.

Evolution of Communications in the United States

- Technology changes are outgrowing the traditional limits of telecom services and geographies, and are fundamentally reshaping the industry's competitive structure, business models, economics and regulatory frameworks.
- Since the dot-com and telecom meltdowns, the capital markets have recognized the inherent business risks associated with investment in communications; consequently, the cost of capital has increased and access to it has been constrained.
- Industry experts predict that eventually only two or three companies in the world will be capable of serving global customers. This merger helps ensure that at least one of those companies will be U.S.-based.
- Given the macro changes in the industry, today's telecom companies are faced with an uncertain future that presents significant risks, as well as opportunities. To succeed, companies must evolve, adapt and expand their capabilities.

A New Era. A New Company

Edgar Filing: AT&T CORP - Form 425

- The merger of SBC and AT&T is an important next step in the evolution of the communications industry and will bring needed consolidation to an industry that has been challenged by dramatic changes.
- Together, SBC and AT&T will be better-positioned for success and leadership within a rapidly changing industry, setting the standard for transition from legacy technologies to advanced, next-generation IP networks and services.
- The union creates a financially stable firm that can offer large corporate and government customers a full suite of best-in-class telecommunications services, across technologies and around the globe.
- The combined company will be a stronger U.S.-based global competitor capable of significant investments in advanced Data/IP and wireless technologies.
