Termination of the Natural Gas Price Volatility Reduction Contract

(Rio de Janeiro, August 17, 2006). PETRÓLEO BRASILEIRO S/A - PETROBRAS, [Bovespa: PETR3/PETR4, NYSE: PBR/PBRA, Latibex: XPBR/XPBRA, BCBA: APBR/APBRA], a Brazilian international energy company, announces the termination of a hedge contract signed in October 2002, known as the Natural Gas Price Volatility Reduction Contract (CRVP), firming with Empresa Petrolera Andina S.A. - ANDINA. The objective of this contract was to reduce exposure to any excessive variation in the price for acquiring natural gas under a long-term purchase contract (Gas Supply Agreement - GSA).

Since the regulatory changes in Bolivia, the parties involved in the contract have been interpreting differently its application. Petrobras has been addressing the possible economic and legal effects of these changes applicable to the CRVP.

Following negotiations, the parties have decided to terminate the contract, with Petrobras receiving an amount of US$ 41.3 million. Remaining credits earmarked to the CRVP, worth US$ 76.7 million, are to be recognized as a loss in third quarter results for the current fiscal year, in accordance with Brazilian accounting principles.
