DBRS has downgraded the long-term debt ratings of the General Motors group of companies ("GM" or the "Group") to BBB (high) from A (low), all with Stable trends. With these rating actions, the Company has been removed from "Under Review With Negative Implications".

In the past, the Group's rating has been influenced by two key factors: (1) the long-term decline in GM's market share, and (2) high sales incentives, which were impacting margins. However, three other key factors are influencing the ratings, which resulted in the downgrades: (1) Rising health care costs. The inability to drive health care cost increases down from GM's initial health care cost inflation rate of 8.5% to its ultimate health care cost inflation rate of

Edgar Filing: GENERAL MOTORS CORP - Form 8-K

5%. An upward revision to the initial trend rate (as recently indicated by management) would cause an increase in the size of the net unfunded other post-employment benefits (OPEB) liability ($57 billion as at December 31, 2003, excluding Medicare subsidy of $4 billion). (2) Problems in GM Europe. The problems in GM Europe are worse than expected and will be costly to remedy. The Company's plan to lay off 12,000 personnel in Europe, particularly the 10,000 workers in Germany, will be costly and not without execution risk. (3) Rising energy and material prices. High gasoline prices could impact the demand for GM's highly profitable SUVs and pickup trucks. In addition, rising material costs (steel and plastics) place further pressure on the already thin automotive margins.

Nevertheless, the BBB (high) rating is still well supported by GM's favourable balance sheet and good liquidity. DBRS expects that a solid introduction of new vehicles should help stabilize market share over the next five years. Price incentives have shown some evidence of moderating, which together with the Company's long track record on cost reductions should help stabilize earnings. Furthermore, General Motors Acceptance Corporation has a relatively liquid portfolio of auto receivables, strong asset quality, and continues to generate solid income. Thus, DBRS has assigned Stable trends to the long-term debt.
