February 3, 2014

Messrs. Michael Saylor, Jonathan Klein, Paul Zolfaghari, Douglas Thede, and members of the Board of Directors

MicroStrategy Inc.

1850 Towers Crescent Plaza

Tysons Corner, VA 22182

Dear Sirs:

As of February 3, 2014, Apex Capital, LLC and its affiliates own 467,100 shares of MicroStrategy Inc. (the "Company"), representing 5.15% of the Company's Class A shares outstanding. Apex has maintained an investment position in MicroStrategy for nearly two years. We have chosen to take this opportunity to express our dissatisfaction with certain Board and management policies that we find detrimental to shareholder value. Such policies include the Company's: a) lack of an investor communication program; b) weak corporate governance; and c) overcapitalized balance sheet.

We believe that these factors have had a deleterious impact on shareholder returns over a multi-year period. Furthermore, it is the responsibility of MicroStrategy's Board of Directors to pursue business and governance objectives that are in the best interest of all stakeholders (not just those that support the welfare of its Founder, Chairman and CEO). In our view, the Board has acted in a way that fails to meet a reasonable standard of fiduciary behavior.

Still, MicroStrategy's market position and future prospects are very encouraging. The Company has a long history of innovation and remains a leader in the market for Business Intelligence (BI) software, providing what many industry analysts believe to be the best BI platform currently available. Furthermore, management continues to demonstrate its thought leadership, bringing cutting edge emerging technologies (such as its Mobile Analytics suite and recently introduced high performance PRIME platform) to market. Despite such technological achievements, the stock currently trades at a material discount to its intrinsic value (as much as 70% in our view). While the example of an industry leader trading at such a discount is highly unusual, it is our contention that easily identifiable and addressable steps would lessen this disparity and maximize shareholder value.

Lack of Investor Communication Program

Almost nine years ago, MicroStrategy chose to sever all traditional communications with the investment community. By abandoning quarterly conference calls, no longer attending investor conferences and making executives (and even Investor Relations personnel) unavailable to investors, Company management created a vacuum of information pertaining to its strategic vision and financial plan.

CUSIP 594972408

Consequently, the Company's enterprise value remains trapped at roughly $1 billion despite a more than doubling of revenue since 2005. This valuation reflects a mere 1.7x Enterprise Value/2014 Sales (a fraction of the typical 4-10x accorded to its software peers).

Furthermore, this policy of blatant non-communication has directly resulted in the Company's current pariah status on Wall Street—with only 4 sell-side analysts covering the stock (3 long time MicroStrategy analysts recently dropped coverage). It is our opinion that the majority of institutional investors who take their fiduciary responsibilities seriously are reluctant or unwilling to consider an investment in a company that refuses to communicate with its shareholders. Deutsche Bank analyst Karl Keirstead, who recently initiated coverage on MicroStrategy with a "Hold" rating, cited the Company's non-communication policy as a key reason for his conclusion on the stock:

"For roughly 10 years now, MSTR has adopted a policy of not communicating with investors or analysts (no earnings calls, no guidance, no meetings, no contact) and appears to place little value on its share price. This policy is the work of the founder and CEO Michael Saylor, who controls 64% of the total voting power. Given these factors, the stock is not actively followed on the sell-side and many investors are in our judgment put off by the lack of communication and hence visibility."

MicroStrategy's justification for this decision was summarized by Founder, Chairman and CEO Michael Saylor's comments on the Company's last conference call in April 2005:

"I kind of side with Warren Buffett on this particular issue, which is over the long-term the market is a weighing machine – it will weigh our cash flows; it will weigh our cumulative success over time with our customer base and generating revenues...So I think we'll just look to the long-term with regard to that, and we try to focus upon long-term shareholder value creation."

Nearly nine years later, with a firm enterprise value roughly equal to what it was in 2005, it is clear that this experiment has failed to produce the long-term shareholder value envisioned by Mr. Saylor. Further exacerbating our concern, the lack of a well-articulated plan is concurrent with the Company's massive and consistent spending on investments in R&D and sales personnel. This has resulted in driving the Company's operating margin from 35% in 2005 to near breakeven in 2013.

To our knowledge, no public software company has deleveraged to this extent, particularly while continuing to expand its revenue base. In our view, a return to a more normalized 30% operating margin would yield earnings of over $12 per share on 2014 consensus revenue estimates. At the very least, some level of discourse would enable investors to better understand the Company's operating strategies and evaluate whether it has a viable plan to ultimately increase shareholder value.

Weak Corporate Governance

While we are impressed by Mr. Saylor's vision and execution in successfully creating and leading the Company for the past 24 years, we believe that MicroStrategy would now be better served by adopting the prevalent governance practice of splitting the Chairman and CEO roles, with Mr. Saylor assuming the Chairman role. We recommend that the Board conduct an extensive executive search for a CEO capable of being fully engaged with the daily business and operations of the Company.

Given the communications void referenced above, the only way for investors to potentially grasp the direction of the Company or its strategic priorities is to follow Mr. Saylor's presentations, public interviews, and Twitter feed. This has overall been a frustrating experience. Given his last two appearances on Fox Business News in which he discussed his book (The Mobile Wave) and the Company's non-core Usher product, we continue to question the Company's allocation of resources and management's strategic focus.

Furthermore, the recent stream of photos of Mr. Saylor's yachts in exotic locations (as posted on his Twitter feed) does little to assuage our fears that the Company's senior management is not fully engaged in the day-to-day operations of the business or agonizing over inferior shareholder returns. We continue to believe Mr. Saylor's technological vision remains one of the Company's key assets. However, at this critical stage in the Company's life cycle, we believe that his skills and expertise are best suited for a Chairman or advisory capacity. There is ample precedent where successful technology company founders—among them Bill Gates at Microsoft and Sergey Brin at Google—made a natural progression into these types of roles.

In addition, we recommend that the Board fill the current vacancies created by the departures of Co-Founder/Vice Chairman Sanju Bansal and Matthew Calkins. In doing so, we trust that qualified independent directors with public company experience will be considered for these vacant seats. It is our opinion that the current Board would benefit from the oversight of more experienced directors, as no current Board member has been a C-level executive at another public company. With an average board tenure of approximately 11 years, and with no new Board members added since February 2006, there is a pressing need for a fresh perspective.

Overcapitalized Balance Sheet/Share Repurchase

Analysts and investors remain perplexed by the Board's willingness to maintain a $350+ million cash hoard in light of its preapproved share repurchase authorization totaling $455 million. The Company's failure to utilize any portion of this authorization since 2010—even when the stock price was in line with previous repurchase levels—remains troubling and inexplicable. We strongly recommend that the Board take advantage of the current valuation disparity through an aggressive deployment of this cash balance and utilization of modest financial leverage. The Company's healthy and consistently growing recurring maintenance revenues (nearly 50% of total revenues) could in our view easily support up to $250 million of leverage. Such a buyback (representing roughly one-third of the Company's outstanding shares at current prices) would be highly accretive to per share earnings.

As software industry observers are aware, MicroStrategy's three most direct comparables in the Business Intelligence space (Cognos, Hyperion, and Business Objects) were all acquired for multiples between 8-11x maintenance revenue, compared to MicroStrategy's current 4x ratio. Newer competitors such as QlikTech ($2.1 billion Enterprise Value) and Tableau ($4.4 billion Enterprise Value) have lesser revenues yet boast higher public market valuations. Given the Company's apparent valuation disparity relative to its peers, now seems to be an opportune time to create lasting shareholder value via a meaningful buyback.

Recommendations to the MicroStrategy Board of Directors

In summary, we suggest the following:

- 1) Reinstitute a quarterly conference call and hire a dedicated Investor Relations professional to open a line of communication with investors, prospective investors, and sell-side analysts;

- 2) Communicate a roadmap that articulates long-term product strategy and financial objectives;

- 3) Separate the Chairman and CEO roles with Mr. Saylor driving the technological vision of the Company in a Chairman or advisory role and hire or promote a fully engaged CEO with leadership and operational experience in the software industry;

- 4) Fill the current Board vacancies with independent directors that have public company experience and strong software industry backgrounds;

5) Take advantage of the severely depressed stock price by aggressively utilizing all of the Company's $455 million share repurchase authorization.

It is our belief that the aforementioned actions would be in the best interest of MicroStrategy and its stakeholders and serve to maximize shareholder value. Furthermore, we are confident that these actions would narrow the valuation disparity between MicroStrategy and its peer group and best position the Company to remain the predominant provider of enterprise-focused Business Intelligence software for years to come.

Thank you for your consideration of our recommendations.

Sincerely,

/s/ Sanford J. Colen
