In the early 1900s, George Westinghouse was locked in a pitched battle with GE, founded by his archrival Thomas Edison, over whose locomotive would pull trains into the newly electrified Grand Central Terminal in Manhattan. GE won, and the contract helped propel its transportation unit among the greatest locomotive makers in the world.

More than a century later, the old competitors are ready to do business together. GE said that it would merge GE Transportation with Wabtec Corporation, a global provider of equipment, systems and services for transit and freight rail with some 18,000 employees. The W in Wabtec stands for Westinghouse.

Under the agreement, which has been approved by the boards of directors of GE and Wabtec, GE will receive $2.9 billion in cash at closing and its shareholders will get a 50.1 percent stake in the combined company. Wabtec shareholders will hold the remaining 49.9 percent. The companies said the merger will make Wabtec “a Fortune 500, global transportation leader in rail equipment, software and services, with operations in more than 50 countries.”
